Introduction

Introduction to Lesson 1.2.3

A basis is a vector space's "skeleton", so to speak. It gives the space structure and allows us to decompose any element in the space into a linear combination of simple building blocks, namely, the basis vectors. Bases are extremely important in signal processing: we will see in the next module that the Fourier Transform is simply a change of basis.

✓ Completed

Go to next item

👍 Like　　👎 Dislike　　⚑ Report an issue